

Featured Teacher: Thania Durante

"My students and I chose the title 'My World Full of Kindness' based on our weekly lesson about kindness."

Cast of Characters

Preschool students in Port St. Lucie, FL.

Background and Setting

Durante has been a teacher for 18 years. This is her first year with Studentreasures.

Memorable Learning

"My students who struggle with ELA skills began their journey only knowing a few alphabet letters in their names. By the time we finished our book, they were able to sit down, turn pages from left to right, identify all of the letters in their names and label the alphabet letters and sounds."

"Any teacher out there, please take advantage of this unique opportunity because it is once in a lifetime."

Weekly Kindness Lessons

As a faith-based teacher, Durante wrote about why she was inspired to create a classbook. "This is my first year with Studentreasures. My students and I chose the title 'My World Full of Kindness' based on our weekly lesson about kindness. My class wants to be able to teach children around the world that we are all God's children who share His word and love with everyone around us."

Fun Characters and Colorful Drawings

Durante is passionate about teaching her students about kindness. She incorporated fun activities to make the lessons more enjoyable and created an amazing kindness classbook in the process.

"My students enjoyed the entire process of becoming writers. Their families were even more excited to receive the published books. We began by putting up a draft showcasing individual love, care and kindness experiences, creating fun characters and drawing colorful pictures. After completing 20 stories we put our pages together to ship our finished masterpiece."

Literacy Journey

The growth that Durante witnessed in her students was remarkable.

"My students who struggle with ELA skills began their journey only knowing a few alphabet letters in their names. By the time we finished our book, they were able to sit down, turn pages from left to right, identify all of the letters in their names and label the alphabet letters and sounds. They could now read a book and respond to literacy by describing the sequence of events and identifying the parts of the book."

Creating Active Readers

Creating a classbook has taught Durante's preschoolers to describe characters, sequences and more while reading a story.

"There is one student who grew from not understanding how to identify parts of a book to describing a sequence of events and responding to the main characters in a story. Now he is an active reader and enjoys using writing tools and creating diagrams."

An Easter Surprise

"My entire class was so excited to find out we published a book. Our director walked through the door and said, 'Hey guys, I have a box here for your class,' while I was in the middle of serving my class their food during our family day for "Easter Bunny Day." We all jumped joyfully, smiling and cheering together. Afterward, our families picked up their book copies. I received so many compliments from the parents and how much their families enjoyed reading the stories over the weekend."

Once In A Lifetime Opportunity

Durante encourages all teachers to publish. "Any teacher out there, please take advantage of this unique opportunity because it is once in a lifetime."
